The system of slavery, as I have observed it in Kentucky, wears none of those traits of ernelty and brutality that have been pictured on the Northern mind. The household of kind master and contented slave has something of advantage and attractiveness in it. But the content, the quiet, and the mutual confidence have passed away. I need not stop to tell why. We all know. It is palpable that, so long as the war continues, slavery will continue to turnile to pieces. When the war is over and the freed slave returns to intermix with the others, the institution could only be preserved in the form of a modified state of war, resulting at last open war between the races. Who so simle as to want for a slave a man who has borne arms as a soldier under a promise of freedom for his services? That is the object of Italian aspirations, and the centre of patriotle hopes. If it were possible, by a compensation in money to Induce the l'ope to relinquish what little remains of his temporal power and retire to the Leonine city, the wishes of the Italians might easily be carried cut. But, supported by France or Austria, there can be no doubt that His Holiness wil still exhibit an uncompromising spirit, and cling as obstitutely as ever to the last fragment of territory over which he enjoys secular rule. If i be true that the Emperor of France, on the death of the pre-ent Pontiff, has the intention by a motion of his finger, to cause his cousin the Cardinal Lucian Bonsporte to become the successor of Pius IX., then the obtacles at present in the way to the possession of Rome may be removed, or new obstructions, and more Learly insuperable, may hinder its acquisition. th it were possible to add a new attraction to the Eternal City, then by becoming the Capital of the Italian Kingdom that new charm would be found. No Capital city in the world could be found to compare with it in interest. For at least half the year l'aris would have to rem nuce its claim to be the social centre of Europe, and while retaining the political sceptre. it is don't ful if it would not be obliged to descend half way the steps of its diplomatic throne. ILMAN. B. HESS. J. F. RAMBERGER respected, is for a moment to be put against that grand set timent of patriction which truly ennobles a people. We may love our bellonly a petty provincial attachment if our souls are lneapable of being inflamed by that imperial pirit which makes us aspire to be a purt of a great nation. The Italian parliament was divided between those who would have the capital carried to Florence or Nuples, or retained at Turin until Rome could be canmered or purchased. Cialdini urged most strongly of all that the offer of France should be accepted, and the government transferred specesses, or new complications in Europe following the death of the Emperor-which he asked heaven to forbid-some new good may be wrought out for Italy. Meanwhile, he said, let Italy by a strong military and naval force, mintained at the highest point of ellienev remain in condition to preserve what she has already galard. The reglar army of It dy has new a force of 300,000 men. The National Gnard or organized local militla, is composed of not less than two hundred battalions. With such a military arm, Italy is to har out Austria. and held the door against France. Patience and steadfastness, it is clear enough, will do mere for Italy now than precipitate action. For the present she may gale enough by the gentle might of moral influence. Thus in spite of the wearlsome shifts and tricks of Louis Napoleon, the machinations of Austria, the sinister predictions of the English nation, and the rancor of the London Times, the Italian Kingdom is formed. The long suffering trust, the many times disappointed hopes, and the self-sacrificing efforts of the Italians, are not to remain sterile. The future of the country is assured. To Americans, Italy must ever be dear. By one Italian, this continentour continent-was discovered, and from another it received its name. There are no antagonisms, and we can conceive of noue belween that ancient race of Europe and this recent nation of the New World.
